PIONEERS IN Education

Don't take your education for granted! Thanks to these four people, many of us now have access to free education both in the classroom and also online.

A Horace Mann Horace Mann, an American politician in the 19th century, believed that the best way to raise decent citizens was through a proper education. School should not only teach reading, writing and basic maths, but also moral values. Mann did not attend school regularly, so he taught himself at the town library. Remarkably, he went on to become the secretary of the Board of Education. Mann felt that everyone deserved the right to free education and expert teachers. He hoped to increase the school leaving age to 16, widen the range of school subjects and improve teachers' pay, although men went on to earn more than women. As for discipline, Mann worked on making school compulsory, achieving regular attendance and introducing the school bell in the US to make students arrive on time. Without Mann, imagine what school life would be like today!

B Savitribai Phule Savitribai Phule's fight for women's rights in the 19th century means that women in India now enjoy greater access to education. When Savitribai got married, she was still a child. Her progressive husband taught her to read and write because women were not allowed to go to school at that time. However, they both believed that schooling was a basic right, whatever the gender or social class. After qualifying as a teacher at 17, she established India's first school for girls in 1848 where girls could take subjects such as maths and science. Both Savitribai and her husband faced criticism because their views on educating girls were unpopular. People would throw mud, stones or rubbish at Savitribai when she went out, and they were even rejected by their own family and ordered to leave the family home. Despite everything, the couple ran 18 schools successfully and Savitribai's contribution to gender equality in India is celebrated today.

C Maria Montessori Maria Montessori felt that young children should be active in their lessons. Not originally interested in education, Montessori applied to study medicine, but she was turned down because she was a woman. Eventually, she managed to get a place and became one of Italy's first female doctors in 1896. She began working as a psychiatrist, but later became interested in education. She opened her first school in Rome and developed her own method, which she described as 'auto-learning'. Maria believed that children were naturally curious and with this in mind, she designed her own learning materials. She found that, if left alone, the children would choose one of the resources, play with it and learn for themselves. The Montessori approach is now used in thousands of schools all around the world. More than 100 years after Maria Montessori opened her first school, educators are still weighing up her ideas today and probably will do so for many years to come.

D Salman Khan This century, Salman Khan's Academy has had a huge impact on remote learning. It began in 2004, when Khan began helping his cousin Nadia who was struggling with maths. As they lived so far apart, Khan would teach her using a phone and a simple computer tool. It was a success and more relatives asked for this help. Khan started posting videos online so people outside the family could also benefit. These videos were the start of the Khan Academy which teaches subjects such as maths, science and history. This has brought about a revolution in education, where learners of all ages can take charge of their own learning rather than being told by a teacher, and all for free. Currently, more than 165 million people, based in 190 different countries and using 56 languages, are registered on this not-for-profit organisation; and these numbers are expected to grow.

3 Some young people want to start working or prefer to learn skills in a different way. Apprenticeships are a great solution.

THIS IS WHY

4 Doing an apprenticeship is a good idea. You get the qualifications you know employers want.

I WOULD ARGUE THAT ... AS

5 Apprenticeships help you get into employment more quickly. There is more opportunity to progress in your career.

IN MY OPINION

'Online learning should replace traditional classroom learning.'

Do you agree?

While some people believe that online learning is the future of education, I would argue that traditional classroom learning is better for several reasons and should not be replaced completely.

In the traditional classroom, the teacher is there and available. It seems to me that this has many advantages. For instance, since the teacher can see their students' faces, they know immediately who needs help. I also think students are more likely to ask questions if there is a teacher in the room. Finally, the teacher can check that everyone is focused on the task.

In my view, the traditional classroom also has benefits for the students. For example, it creates a community, and students feel like they belong there. Being together in person encourages groupwork. This is why students become better at working together – a vital life skill. This type of learning also allows students to do things physically.

To conclude, I disagree with the idea that online learning should be used instead of traditional classroom learning. In my opinion, there are too many benefits, such as stimulating natural conversation, for this type of learning to be replaced.

4 Write a third paragraph with some or all of the ideas below, or your own ideas. Include reasons and/or examples to justify them. Try to use the words and phrases from Exercise 1.

- Apprenticeships can be adapted to specific roles in the company – great flexibility.
- Apprenticeships are an excellent way to recruit new staff – you get the skilled workers you need for the future.
- Employers can get funding and apprenticeships are a great way to attract people with new ideas to the company.
- Learning can be done in the workplace – no disruptions or interruptions, you can fit it in when it suits you.
